This does not at all mean reach all, and should there be some who are overlooked, this will surely be unintentional, and their contribution will be gladly accepted and much appreciated.

Norwich University Notes.

Manager Kinsman may secure another home game with the Fort McKinley baseball club during the first of June. Some Norwich graduates looking for a change of position in engineering work may well write Mr. Fred C. Davis, 117 Main street, Ellensburg, Wash.

By special request from President Spooner and Captain Woodbury, Mr. Charles R. Drum, international secretary of the Y. M. C. A., recently spoke to the corps in Dewey hall. His lecture was an appeal to the clean making of every American youth was most helpful and interesting. All those who heard Mr. Drum's speech have expressed a desire to hear him again and many of the men have said that it was the most forceful plea ever given on the hill toward the establishment of higher ideals.

W. A. Ellis, the Norwich university historian, has just received a life size painting of Cadet William R. Stone, class of 1845, which is to be presented to Norwich university library; also two books, "One Way Around the World," and "One Way Round South America," written by Delight Sweetser Proutie, daughter of James V. Sweetser, '05, which will also be presented to the library.

Great interest is being shown on the hill by the efforts of Cadet Lieut. W. J. Johnson, who, in regard to working up his thesis on wireless telegraphy, has been vainly striving to fly kites, miniature aeroplanes and tiny airships. His object is to lift a wire high enough into the air to signal over the nearby hills. A large number of the cadets have imitated his actions in trying to fly all sorts of light and fantastic objects.

How Hummingbirds Learn to Fly.

William L. Finley, the well-known naturalist, writes entertainingly in Suburban Life for May, under the title, "Tenants of a Worn-out Orchard." These tenants are, of course, birds of many kinds, including a family of hummingbirds. Speaking of the baby hummingbirds, Mr. Finley says: "I often wondered how these tiny creatures learned to fly. When the time comes, they seem to spring into the air full-grown and fully equipped. By watching at the hummingbird nest, I finally learned the reason. The youngsters took their turns sitting on the nest edge, stretching their wings, combing their tails, and preening their feathers. Each would try his wings. The wings started slowly, as if getting up steam. Then they buzzed, till their fairly lifted the bird off his feet. In this way, they practised many times a day, so that, when the time was ripe, the breaking of home ties simply meant two buzzing streaks."

The Cooks who have used the Single Damper of the Crawford Ranges will never go back to the troublesome two-damper range

The cost of the food spoiled by mistakes in regulating the ordinary two-damper ranges amounts to a large sum.

The Single Damper of the Crawford affords absolute fire and oven control by one motion—slide the knob to "kindle," "bake" or "check," the range does the rest.

The Oven of the Crawford has cup-joint heat flues which heat everywhere alike and make it the quickest and surest of bakers.

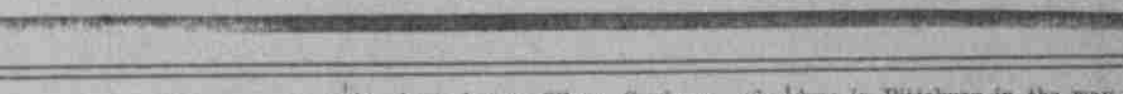

The Two Hods (patented) in the base—one for ashes instead of the old clumsy ash pan—one for coal, is a great trouble-saving feature.

Gas Ovens and Broilers above or at end of range, if desired.

Ask the Crawford agent to show you and write us for circulars.

The Idiot at the Breakfast Table.

"I hope you are satisfied with our table, Mr. Idiot," said the landlady.

"In the main, yes," replied the idiot.

"But I really think I ought to register a complaint against yesterday's fishballs, madam."

"Why, I am sorry about that," said the landlady, blushing. "We rather pride ourselves on our fishballs. What was the matter with them, sir?"

"Mine had a distinctly fishy taste," returned the idiot.—Harper's Weekly.

The Women's National Game.

There is always something impressive about a crowd that is swayed by a single emotion; you get an impression of force, says Mary Stanton Vorse in "Success Magazine." These women, who a few moments ago had been quiet shoppers, formed a mob. They swayed and pushed as though moved by a common impulse toward a table where were the embroideries. From their throats came a little dull growl, a curious noise—the whisper of a mob. The noise of a mob in joy or in anger or in fright, or just its restless murmur as it waits, is different from any other noise that comes from the human throat—quite distinct, of a curious animal timber. I heard it once on the occasion of the throwing of a bomb; again from a crowd waiting for a bank to open, and a third in a theatre when fire had been called; and now here it was in miniature from a couple of hundred women waiting for ten-cent embroideries. They were poor women with shawls and baskets, women with babies in their arms, women with threadbare clothes carefully brushed, who must think before spending each dime in the dollar, but for once indulging in the great sport of American women—bargain hunting.

A Pronouncement by the Beast.

Mr. Field, president of the telephone company, was the active head of the corporation opposition and he did not disguise it. When Mr. Gilson Gardener, the Washington correspondent of the Scripps papers, came to Denver, Field said to him—in one of the most important pronouncements ever made by the Beast: "Our company is in politics? Yes, why? By virtue of necessity. Our company contributes to political parties and for political purposes? Yes, why? Because this is the modern system. It began years ago. It exists for the same reason that we contribute to a state fair or a Y. M. C. A. It became the custom, long since, to expect corporations to contribute to all kinds of things. And finally it was politics. Then it became necessary. Then came the unfair acts, and we needed men in office who would be our friends."

"Our company is in politics in order to have friends. We never have asked for anything improper. I speak for no other corporation or person; but our company has always been above reproach. But we do have friends. We have them in both parties. They come to me and ask advice. They come and ask me to help them lay their plans. They come regardless of their parties, and they hold meetings in my office. I am not a boss. I have carefully avoided being anything like that. But I can't help it if they come to me and ask advice."

He admitted that he had opposed my nomination in both parties. "My opposition," he boasted, "was effective. Yes, it was effective with both parties. Judge Lindsey's name was left off both tickets."

He said he had opposed me because I had made attacks on his "personal character," but that statement deceived no one. I had never attacked him, except as one of the corporation presidents who were debauching politics and maintaining the political system that united the law-breaking "olives," gambling halls and brothels with the law-breaking public utility companies and their corrupted courts. He decided no one—least of all his interviewer, Gilson Gardener, who wrote in The Express: "Judge Lindsey has been left off two strong party tickets in defiance of the voters' will and in pure revenge, for the truth which he has told, it is the work of the corporation powers—the tramway-telephone-water-gas combination, manipulated by such men as Field and Evans."—Judge Lindsey in the May Everybody's.

A Natural "Keep-off-the-Grass" Sign.

In Suburban Life for May, Mr. M. Pelton White tells of his trouble in developing a parking strip in front of his house—trouble which was accentuated by the fact that passers-by persisted in walking over the grass. A vacant property across the street tempted "grown-ups" and children alike to use the strip as a cut-off, and they soon had the sod tramped into well-worn paths. On the curb side, drivers often permitted their horses to enjoy pastures green. "Finally," writes Mr. White, "we solved the difficulty. Leaving a border a foot wide on the inside of the strip, we took out the rest of the sod and filled the space with marigolds and California poppies. People who would not 'keep off the grass' had scruples concerning flower-beds, and our grass plot was saved."

Pittsburg Still Asleep.

James Oppenheim, the short story writer, contributes a scathing arraignment of the city of Pittsburg to the May American Magazine. Not the least part of its astounding and compelling quality is the temperateness of the author. Mr. Oppenheim tells first of his impressions of the city on his initial visit and then of his investigation resulting from his impressions. He reviews the work that has already been done in Pittsburg in the way of alleviating conditions and then says: "But, for all that, Pittsburg is not awake. She does not see. There is merely a great buzzing at the top. Churches and professions, city departments and public bodies, the civic commission and an Associated Charities, have not been able as yet to strike beneath the surface. The thoughtful will tell you confidently: 'We can show the people the value of grading a street, the value of abating the smoke nuisance, the value of building a new bridge—but we can't make them see human values. When it comes to the problem of the twelve-hour work-day, the wages of labor, the trade-union, there is very little we can say of them.'"

"You may work earnestly to get a man a job, but if there are two thousand men out of work and only one thousand vacant jobs, wherein have you touched the problem of unemployment?"

"You may try for a time to stop prostitution by closing up houses and arresting women, but if shop-girls are still paid wages on which they cannot live, wherein has the problem been touched?"

"You may pass a child labor law, but if a family is so poor that every member of it must work to keep away starvation, wherein has the problem been touched?"

"You may establish a Carnegie library in a mill section, but if the laborers are worked twelve hours a day and have neither time nor strength for reading, wherein has the problem been touched?"

"It is a buzzing at the top. It is like trying to cure appendicitis with a porous plaster instead of opening the body and getting at the appendix."
